DOG BREEDS

America's Most Dangerous Dog Breeds

by Niall McCarthy, Sep 14, 2018

Given the myriad of circumstances behind dog attacks, studies into fatal interactions between canines and humans have always courted controversy. In the mid 1990s, The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention conducted a study into the dog breeds involved in fatal U.S. attacks between 1979 and 1996. During that timeframe, the Pit Bull was identified as the breed/type of dog involved in 60 fatal attacks, while the Rottweiler was recorded in 29 and the German Shepherd was in 19.

Dog attacks still regularly make headlines today and according to research from a national victims' group dedicated to increasing awareness of the problem, the breeds responsible for most fatal attacks have remained the same. DogsBite.org compiled a 13-year fatality report identifying breeds of dogs involved in U.S. attacks from 2005 to 2017.

As can be seen from the following infographic, the Pit Bull is still the breed/type of dog responsible for the most fatal attacks with 284 incidents identified, 66 percent of the total. The Rottweiler comes a distant second with 45 fatal attacks over those 13 years while the German Shepherd is third with 20. Surprisingly, some breeds which are not known for aggression, such as the Labrador Retriever, make the top-10 list with 9 attacks on record.
